Notes

I. Introduction (0:19)

II. Dependence on Holy Spirit (1:19)

Biblical interpretation is commonly treated as an impersonal event.

Hermeneutics involves interaction between human interpreters and the Holy Spirit.

A. Inspiration (3:22)

Definition: The Holy Spirit moved human beings to write God's revelation as Scripture and superintended their work in a way that made their writings infallible.

Three views of inspiration:

- Romantic: Scripture isn't God's infallible truth, but only the personal reflections and opinions of the human authors.
- Mechanical: The Holy Spirit essentially dictated the Bible and human writers passively recorded what he said.
- Organic: The Holy Spirit used the personalities, experiences, outlooks, and intentions of human authors as he supervised and directed their writing.

1. Divine Source (11:47)

The Holy Spirit has intimate knowledge of the Bible's meaning and of the way it communicates that meaning.

One of the most important implications of the divine origin of Scripture is the Bible's unquestionable veracity.

Ways interpreters handle apparent contradictions in Scripture:

- Critical Interpreter: Reject the divine inspiration of Scripture and elevate their understanding over the Spirit's authority.

- Submissive Interpreter: Affirm the divine inspiration of Scripture, expecting and assuming it to be true and harmonious, even when they can't demonstrate or prove its truthfulness.

2. Human Means (20:24)

God had the Scriptures composed by means of human authors.

The Scriptures were written by different people, and they reflect the diversity of that human authorship.

B. Illumination (23:17)

The Holy Spirit's work of conveying a proper understanding of Scripture to a human being.

Through his illumination, the Holy Spirit grants us knowledge of his Word.

III. Need for Human Effort (28:20)A. Importance (28:32)

Well-meaning Christians often minimize anything that looks like human effort when they prepare to read the Bible.

The Holy Spirit ordinarily illumines us by means of the efforts we put into preparation.

B. Influences (33:58)1. Exegesis (35:03)

Definition: Drawing meaning out of biblical texts.

The exegesis of Scripture prepares us for further interpretation of the Bible and further study.

2. Interaction (36:39)

Other people have received great gifts and insights from the Holy Spirit that can help us as we interpret Scripture.

Our interpretations of Scripture are and should be deeply influenced by other people.

3. Experience (38:28)

Personal aspects of Christian living contribute to our interpretations of Scripture in a variety of ways.

Each individual has different personal things that influence how they interpret and apply Scripture.

IV. Conclusion (42:23)

3. What is the doctrine of illumination?

4. Why is human effort important when preparing to interpret Scripture?

5. Describe the three major influences on our efforts when we prepare to interpret Scripture.
